THAT SUMERNAULT ON THE CON-STITUTION.

The Supreme Court room at Washington has been a piece in which strange revelations have been made within the last week. The country was informed at the last session of Congress by the Republican party represented by McKinley and others that it required an act of Congress to extend the constitution to territory acquired by the United States, respecting which position the JOURNAL said at the time was without precedent is the history of government, and without support upon any theory of construction, that could be reasonably given to o r form of government.

The Journal took the position that the constitution did not follow the flux but attached immediately to ac-Quired territory without regard to the whereabouts of the flag at the time.

That the flag is not anything more than a symbol of authority derived from the constitution and its preceeding operation and force upon territory, which the flag by its presence symbolizes The law learning of the writer led him to the conclusion up to the vegueness as he belinged it to be of the construction applied to the constitutio and given out last winter by the administration and then adupted An Invention by the Republican party, that it was not only to appearing to all forms of organized government, but was in direct opposition to the letter and eperit of the constitution and in its mainre revolutionary.
